

SUBUNGUAL FRICTIONAL HEMATOMA DUE TO OVERRIDING TOE

PODPAZNOKCIOWE KRWIAKI JAKO SKUTEK DEFORMACJI PALCA U NOGI

Chang Patricia

*Dermatologist Hospital General de Enfermedades IGSS y Hospital Ángeles
Guatemala pchang2622@gmail.com*

N Dermatol Online. 2011; 2(3): 151-152

Date of submission: 04.02.2011 / acceptance: 12.02.2011
Conflicts of interest: None

We report a male patient of 77 years with subungual frictional hematoma secondary to the deformity of his toe (overriding toe), this finding was incidental during his examination due to the presence of seborrheic keratosis on the scalp.

Subungual hematomas of the nails are common it could be cause by major and minor trauma predominantly on the big toe, the different toe deformity predispose to have subungual frictional hematoma like in the present clinical case.

Figure 1 Overriding left second toe and pincer nails

Figure 2 Close up overriding toe

Figure 3 Subungual frictional hematoma due to overriding toe lateral view

Figure 4 Subungual frictional hematoma due to overriding toe